CONVERSION STORY

Gary Sinise, the actor perhaps best known for playing Lieutenant Dan in the 1994 movie "Forrest Gump," became a Catholic. At one point in the late '90s, I remember my wife (Moira), an actress, was playing the role of a woman in a tavern. Moira was new to her sobriety as she was playing this woman defending her life in a tavern. At one point, Moira went to a Catholic church looking for an AA meeting. She asked a little French woman, where's the AA meeting? The woman looked at her and said you should become a Catholic. Something happened to her at that moment — I don't know, something that had been aligned within her. Her mother was Catholic, but she fell away from the church and married a Methodist. Moira was not raised in any particular faith. After the play, she met Sinise in North Carolina, where he was shooting a movie with Shirley MacLaine.

Sinise recalled, while we're driving in Wilmington, a hurricane was blasting behind us. Moira turns around and says, I'm going to the Catholic Church and I'm going to become a Catholic. I laughed and said, wait a minute. We just moved across the street from a public school. Yes, and I'm going to send our kids to a Catholic school. Sure enough, when we got home she went to the RCIA program at our local Catholic church. We started going to Mass. My wife was confirmed in Easter 2000. The following year that little church became a sanctuary, a place of great comfort following the 9/11 terror attacks in 2001. Our kids started attending the school there, he added.

On Christmas Eve 2010 I told the family I was taking them to dinner at Morton's Steakhouse for Christmas Eve dinner. And on the way there, I pulled into the church, and everybody asked, what are we doing here? I said come on in. We walked into the church. The priest was there, and he confirmed me. It was beautiful. This is one of the many tales Sinise tells in his newly published book, "Grateful American." In the memoir, he details his life growing up in the Chicago suburbs, from being a bratty kid to trying out for a play in high school and catching the acting bug, to helping establish the still-going-strong Steppenwolf Theater Company in the Windy City, as well as his many adventures in films and on stage.

"Have patience with all things – but first of all with yourself."

– St. Francis de Sales.
