EACH ONE TEACH ONE: 13.

On April 7, 1994, Cyprien and Daphrose Rugamba were cut down by the bullets of the Hutu militias. Cyprien was already a celebrated poet and choreographer who had undergone a radical conversion and was working actively for the reconciliation of the different tribal groups within his country. Their killers murdered them on the first night of the genocide, while they were praying before the Blessed Sacrament in their home. The killers desecrated the Tabernacle and scattered the consecrated hosts over the floor. Everybody in Rwanda, already knew the name of Cyprien who worked tirelessly for reconciliation within Rwanda. Together with his wife, Daphrose, he had introduced the Emmanuel community into their country and was working to support street children, making no distinction between the three main ethnic groups in the country, the Hutu, Tutsi, and Twa. Shortly before he was murdered, Cyprien had appealed to the authorities to remove the designation of tribal identity from people's identity cards. It was an initiative that provoked deep hostility from the agitators, who were seeking to foment civil war, which probably earned him his place among the very first victims of the massacre. They set up a charity named after them: Centre Cyprien et Daphrose Rugamba which is still bearing fruit today. For 20 years the Centre has been welcoming children from the streets of Kigali and transforming their lives. Fr. Guy-Emmanuel Cariot, Rector of the Basilica in the French city of Argentueil, organized an evening during which the Rugamba couple would be especially honored on the 25th anniversary of their death. In fact, the cause for their beatification had already been launched by the Archdiocese of Kigali in 2015. [Thoughts from ZENIT] Fr. Vincent Pereira, JCD.
